He Tells How, Broken in Health by Ex-Superintendent of the Society for Hardships in Spanish War, His Nerves Snapped from Overworl When He Returned to Civil Life.

It's much better to have a clever congue and a few interesting war tale to tell than a dozen physicians' certifiwhen you are trying to convince a sheriff's jury that you are cane. Rufus Hatch, son of the late Rufus Hatch, the great banker, proved this yesterday at White Plains. He jury the story of his experiences in the Spanish war with becoming modesty and a touch of wit. When he had finished the jury declared him sane and competent to manage his own affairs.

Young Hatch was committed to Bloom ingdale in July of last year, his nerve having given out as the result of the hardships he endured in the Santiago campaign and the hard work he did after his convalesence, when he plunged into business. He remained there until recently, when he made application for

Volunteered for the War.

When the Spanish war broke out thus Hatch was living in Detroit. He disted in the Thirty-third Michigan was appointed corporal and ent to the front. He was in the fights ng the fall of Santiago, his regient being in Gen. Duffield's brigade Miling the left of the American line.

Milow fever made its first appearance mong the troops in the Thirty-third dichigan because they took possession of one of the Spanish blockhouses, which was infected with the fever. Hatch got it, and was desperately ill. He recovered and was invalided home. On being mustered out he went to work, but soon broke down completely. His family kept him in various sanitariums for awhile and then sent him to Bloomingdale, where he recovered to such an extent that he refused longer to remain in the institution.

When on the stand yesterday he appeared perfectly normal and seemed to enjoy telling his experiences as much as the farmer jury did in hearing them. After describing the landing at Shoney in the scrap his regiment got into he jokingly remarked that the Spaniards seemed to dislike his blue shirt, for the kept popping at it all day.

Veterans Were a Brug.

Veterans Were a Drug.

Veterans Were a Brug.

"After I got over the fever," he continued, "the war fever, so to speak, I went to Detroit. There were so many war veterans scattered around then that they detroit. There were so many war veterans scattered around then that they detroit street in the pretty hard time getting a job, but finally landed one through an army friend. It was a job on the Detroit Street Railway. Six dollars per week. Pretty cheap for me, but what was I to do? But after I had collected ferse for a while and sort of got back my civilian legs I landed a better position.

"This was the position of manager of the American Fruit Trust in Montreal, and in three months, gentlemen, I sold $50,000 worth of bananas. I worked twenty out of twenty-four hours a day for three months, which was enough to make any man nervous.

"Selling fruit isn't all it is cracked up to be. You can't get tired while you have a supply on hand. If you do the supply is apt to remain permanently on your hands until the Board of Health comes around and notifies you that something must be done quickly. And I soon found that an accumulation of fruit was a great deal worse than any of the canned beef we got in the old army days. I gave it up and came down to New York, where I had a brother who I believed was willing to do something for me. Ping-Pong Caused Downfall.

"I wasn't disappointed in my brother. He sent me to an inn at Deal Beach, and paid all my expenses. In three weeks I spent three hundred dolars. At Deal Beach ping peng was my downfall. There was a tournament at the hotel. They got excited over t, and I took the side of a contestant who wasn't popular with the proprietor, guess he wouldn't pay in advance, ather. Anyhow, the landlord called me fool and ordered me out of his place."

Continuing, he told of his amusing eforts to have the proprietor arrested and at in Bloomingdale. The jury laughed artily at his story, and after he had en on the stand two hours declared in free.
